New Executive Director

Dr. Carl R. Spackman has become the new Executive Director of New Hope Ministries, Inc., a Christian social service agency serving families in crisis in the Mechanicsburg, Dillsburg and Dover communities.

Dr. Spackman joins the agency after serving as a minister for the past twenty years. He completed his seminary training and Doctorate of Ministry at Westminster Theology Seminary in Philadelphia, Pa. He is author of the book, Parents Passing on the Faith, and frequently conducts seminars and retreats on Christian parenting.

Dr. Spackman is replacing Joldie Hess who has resigned as of September 1, 1990. Mrs. Hess has worked at New Hope Ministries for the past six years, first serving as Social Service Director of the Dillsburg office and then as Coordinator for the agency. With her resignation, the position of Coordinator has been expanded to Executive Director.

This change reflects the organization's growth and increased demand for services. When New Hope Ministries opened in 1983 it served over 200 families in the Dillsburg area. In 1990 the ministry will serve 850 families living around the Mechanicsburg, Dillsburg and Dover communities. Although over 50% of the agency's clients are working, they often find it difficult to meet family household expenses when their jobs pay minimal wage and are without health benefits.

The mission of the organization continues to be providing material assistance to those in crisis who have no where else to turn for their basic survival needs. Assistance ranges from food stuffs, financial assistance for shelter, heat, utilities and health care to information and referral, crisis counseling and budget management training. More recently services have been expanded to include a drug and alcohol support group, and a group for children providing character-building and drug and alcohol prevention activities. Securing affordable housing continues to be one of the greatest challenges facing the agency and families they serve.

New Hope Ministries is a non-profit organization totally dependent on the financial gifts of individual contributors and local churches. For more information please call any of the three offices at 766-7333, 432-3053 or 292-3441.

Local "Clock Doctor" keeps things ticking to help unwind

by Stacy Wenzel

If it were possible for Father Time to catch a glimpse of Mervin Brubaker's clock shop he would definitely be given with envy.

Beyond the doors of Mr. Brubaker's clock shop, the customers and visitors of his antique and unusual collection are greeted by a symphony of ticking and tocking along with the powerful multitude of striking chimes at the dot of each hour. There are approximately 100 members of this gear drive orchestra with about half comprising Mr. Brubaker's collection. Beyond being a collector of rare and unusual clocks, Mr. Brubaker's main interest lies in the repair and maintenance of his customer's ailing clocks. "Antiquity is not my first love, the mechanics of clocks is my main interest," expressed Mr. Brubaker.

Known throughout the area as the Clock Doctor, Mr. Brubaker has been providing his clock repair services in the greater Harrisburg area for about nine years. He indebts his interests in clocks to Avery Heisey, whose shop he gained first-hand clock repairing experience as his apprentice. "I always had an interest in how things ticked," laughed Mr. Brubaker unable to resist the pun.

Mr. Brubaker describes himself as one who always had an "insatiable desire to understand and solve problems." His fluent background in physics and the tool and dye trade helped in honouing his curiosity in how a clock functions which is in itself an extension of physics oriented properties. "Clocks are an application of a specific group of skills that are natural to me," explained Mr. Brubaker.

Working in Avery Heisey's clock shop provided Mr. Brubaker with the basic hands-on skills he needed to learn the clock repair trade. When working there, he self-taught himself the bulk of this trade by reading clock repair manuals and professional journals. He also taught himself how to operate a lathe, a piece of machinery used to make clock parts.

Right now, Mr. Brubaker says his clock repair business is in the hobby phase and he enjoys it as a diversion from his daily routine. "Clocks are something I enjoy doing when I want to unwind," he light-heartedly commented. Mr. Brubaker's primary occupation is computer instruction at Northern High School where he has taught since 1968.

Mr. Brubaker, who also self taught himself the intricacies of computer programming, integrates his computer knowledge with clock repairing. "I wrote a program I use when working with the lathe that takes the diameter of a gear and computes the accurate number of teeth it should cut," he explained. Using the lathe to cut teeth in a gear is very time consuming and ending up with a lack of space for the final tooth can be disheartening and something Mr. Brubaker successfully avoids by using this program.

Among the many clocks found in Mr. Brubaker's shop, he does boast of his William Gilbert Jewelers Regulator clock as one that has special value to him. Bought from a collection in York County, Mr. Brubaker explained that the jewelers regulator is the time instrument jewelers would use to set all of the clocks in their shops. The clock dates somewhere from 1890-1910.

The oldest clock in Mr. Brubaker's collection is an 1835 Joseph Bowman signature grandfather clock he obtained at a public auction in Lancaster County. "This clock is unique in that it is old and signed and is unspoiled, meaning it has all the original wood and markings, nothing has been changed," he explained. Another older clock in his collection is an E. Howard Banjo Clock which looks like the name implies. It is outlined in 14 ct. gold around the border.

The most unusual clock in Mr. Brubaker's shop, what he calls the Hickory Dickory Dock Clock, which truly should make a believer of anyone doubting that mice can run up clocks. The clock is made of wood and marked only with hours running vertically up the length. The mouse keeps time by climbing another notch up the clock each passing hour until the clock strikes one and he plummets down to climb up again.

The most interesting part of Mr. Brubaker's clock repairing hobby is the challenge of "conquering the clock that takes an unusual amount of time to find the problem no one else can find," he said. Mr. Brubaker enjoys meeting challenges because they require his personal observation skills to find the little thing messed to make a clock run again. "Exceptional observational skills challenge me and interest me," he said.

A German Jewelers Regulator he has had in his shop three times now is one such clock that has definitely challenged his observational skills. "The clock only runs when it's here, but it won't run at the owners house," said Mr. Brubaker of this strange occurrence. He suspects the plaguing problem is the clock is not securely fastened on the customers wall, but he won't quit searching until the problem is conquered.

Mr. Brubaker's has a clientele of about 700 customers throughout the Carlisle, Harrisburg, and York areas. Some customers travel as far as New York and Ohio to visit the Clock Doctor for a diagnosis on their ailing time pieces.

Mr. Brubaker's business has continued to successfully grow over the nine years he has been in business primarily by word of mouth from satisfied customers. Another large bulk of his business comes from the work he does for several local jewelry stores who send their clock repairs to him.

He is also an active member of the National Association of Watch and Clock Collectors. This organization also manages The Watch and Clock Museum in Columbia Pa. where Mr. Brubaker strongly suggests everyone should visit.

His shop can be found at 1 Summit Drive off North Cranham Rd. where Mr. Brubaker lives with his wife Myrtle.

While in his clock shop, Mervin Brubaker, the "Clock Doctor" and his wife Myrtle have grown accustomed to the symphony of chimes when their collection of over 90 clocks ring on the hour.

Weekly HEALTH TIP
CARBOHYDRATES - ENERGY
The average American gets much less than enough protein. Excess protein won't build muscles - only exercise does. Extra protein is stored as fat.
Carbohydrates are the most efficient fuel for the body. For athletes and exercisers, eating more complex carbohydrates (vegetables, fruits, and whole grains) will increase energy reserves (glycogen) in muscles and liver, thus prolonging exercise time before tiring or exhaustion occurs.
